

Barney's At The Fair.

Barney Oldfield, the veteran racing demon, won his first race in 1902 by running his car five miles in five minutes and 28 seconds—less than a mile-a-minute. Barney is working at the world's fair, but has cut his cigar supply to 10 or 12 a day "because I can't afford any more."

Louis Chevrolet, another auto racing pioneer, works for an axle manufacturing concern in Detroit. . . . Bob Smith, trainer of the three-year-old champion Cavalcade, is an expert trainer of prize fighters, dogs, chickens, cats or whatever you mention. He trained Frankie Erne, former lightweight champion.

Lance Richbourg, former National league star now with Nashville, teaches Sunday school regularly. . . . Friends of Dick Crayne, Iowa's star fullback, have hung the handle of "cannonball" on him because he developed a big bald spot over the winter.
