

CHEVROLET MADE MISTAKE

Gave His Own Name and Was Fined for Impersonating.

Detroit, Mich., June 5.—Louis Chevrolet, the racing driver, who is about to open a factory here for building cars on plans of his own, had a funny experience while testing his newly invented engine. He was going about 110 miles an hour on the Grand River road at 4 o'clock in the morning, supposing he had the whole country to himself. But the fierce noise of his exhaust woke up the farmers. A constable piled logs in the road and stopped him. The joke came in when Chevrolet gave his real name and was fined $30 by the indignant officer "for attempting to impersonate Chevrolet."
